THAT ADDRESS .- The Nashville Patriot, aluding to the address issued by the committee of Twenty appointed at the late citizens' meetng in Memphis, observes:

This cry, coming after a long period of concious security, and following so closely upon be brilliant victory of Belmont, is as startling as a fire bell in the midnight watches of the night. It may convey an exaggerated idea of the danger which is impending in the west—and we are in-clined to think it does—yet it is evident that there must be some extraordinary movement in progress on the part of the enemy. The Patriot concludes:

Whilst, therefore, it is unnecessary to spread panic or alarm, it is well for the people to be fully aroused, that they may, it need be, oppos themselves in a countiess stream to impede his narch and press him back upon his own soil. ALABAMA AND TENNESSEE REGIMENT.-This
